

Man Ray

The velvet ropes have come down at Man Ray, the East 15th Street restaurant whose investors include Johnny Depp, John Malkovich, Sean Penn and Harvey Weinstein. But the buzz is still drawing A-list crowds to the former Chelsea firehouse—a fitting locale for a hot spot blending Asian-fusion cuisine, exotic surroundings and New York attitude.

Designer Miguel Cancio Martin—the man behind Buddha Bar, Barfly and Man Ray Paris—has created a visually rich setting. The dining room and adjacent bar are accented by outsized brass shivas and stained glass mandelas holding court with stone statuettes and a soothing waterfall. Seating is ample, too—lots of plush, high-backed chairs for lounging while you sample from the restaurant's extensive sushi offerings and new, more heavily Asian-influenced menu.

Chef Richard Fogel combines the best of Vietnamese, Chinese, Thai and Burmese cuisine—all with a French influence. House specials are updated four times a year and include jumbo sea scallops with long bean, Japanese eggplant and black bean sauce, and steamed halibut with stir-fry bean sprouts and Tom Yum sauce, among others. Finger food is also in abundance, from crisp spring rolls to dumplings you'll want to share.

After dinner, slip into the Velvet Lounge, where crimson velvet chairs and votive candles provide an intimate refuge until 2 AM. Man Ray's Petit Salon—with its deep-red Asian-inspired wallpaper, Man Ray reproductions and gold banquettes—is even more private and just right for parties. And there's a DJ on Friday and Saturday nights in the bar. It's a perfect spot for after-hours entertaining with the film and fashion crowd or—better yet—your own entourage.
